Autism Spectrum Disorders: Integrating Sensory Strategies to Improve Outcomes and Participa- tion in Natural Contexts

With the right kind of support, ALL children can be successful. This session will address common behavioral challenges that may be related to poor processing and integration of sensory information experienced by young children with autism. Meaningful participation can be facilitated by preventing barriers, altering, adapting, and modifying contexts and demands, creating circumstances that support performance, and establishing/restoring skills and ability. Natural settings and environments are preferable for better outcomes. Recent research findings provide evidence that the most effective interventions that address sensory processing skills in children with autism are those that integrate intervention within the child's natural daily routines. Recommendations for sensory interventions in natural contexts and collaboration strategies to strengthen the OT's role as a team member will be presented. This conference will also provide attendees with an overview of the phases of the Picture Communication System (PECS). We will discuss using PECS to expand communication skills and effective ways to incorporate use of PECS in the classroom.
